AlphaDog Solutions

CyberClerk was developed in November of 2002. After a year of research and development, AlphaDog Solutions founder, Michael Melham officially launched the service in October of 2003. The application was an immediate hit with the public as well as with local elected officials. CyberClerk consists of several modules that can be customized for any municipality or government agency. The application can be a stand-alone website or can be easily integrated into a current web site. AlphaDog Solutions can also customize new modules as needed.

CyberClerk is more of a service rather than a product. Our staff meets regularly with the municipality and updates the website daily. This type of hands on service guarantees that your new municipal website will never be outdated.

CyberClerk is a unique opportunity for local governments to begin their online experience. In most municipalities, the clerk's office acts as the gateway of communication between the public and the community. The clerk's office also facilitates a large amount of paperwork on behalf of municipal administrators, elected officials, and appointed professionals. This website application was designed to foster effective communication between the municipal clerk's office and every entity that it meets.

AlphaDog Solutions has been creating and licensing information technology for several years. The company specializes in developing and maintaining long-term Internet relationships for their municipal and corporate clients. Our staff consists of Internet specialists, graphic designers, web designers and programmers, most of which have experience in government.

In 1997, Michael Melham was hired by the County of Essex to manage its public information and oversee the County's official website. While serving as the Webmaster for the County of Essex, Melham developed many modules and maintenance protocols for maintaining government web sites.

In May 2000, and, at the age of 25, Melham was elected to the Belleville Township Council making him among the youngest elected officials in the State of New Jersey. Melham has since used his vast knowledge of local government and information technology to develop custom software and applications to help municipalities enter the information age. Public CIO Magazine recently featured Michael Melham. Called upon for his vast experience and knowledge of local government and technology, the article frequently quoted Melham with regard to the future of municipal websites.

Adding to his accolades and awards, in November of 2005, Melham was voted one of NJ BIZ's Forty rising stars under the age of 40.

Municipal Mashups

AlphaDog Solutions, a leader in Municipal Technology, is pleased to announce a Google Municipal Map Mashup.

A "Mashup" is a website or application that combines two or more pieces of complementing web functionalities from more than one source to create a powerful new web application.

Once a Google Map is fully embedded within your website, specific colored layers may be inserted literally representing any type of zone or district. Additionally, the end user may enter their address and view a custom, dynamically generated map.

Potential Uses

- Voting Districts
- Garbage & Recycling Collection Schedules
- Historical Landmarks
- Parks and Public Places
- And more...
